The Number Between Her Legs discusses some of the issues women face when exploring their sexuality.

Why are women being slut-shamed for having consensual sex with a number of men?

Why has society told us that having a lot of sex is only acceptable if you're male?

THE NUMBER BETWEEN HER LEGS

Emily Bazelon says that slut shaming is 'retrograde, serving as an opposing force against all that feminism stands for.

Calling a girl a slut warns her that there's a line: she can be sexual but not too sexual.'

I remember my first few weeks at university. After making some friends, four of us randomly decided to chill together one evening with a bottle of Blossom Hill's finest red wine. Girls being girls, we spoke about sex and our past sexual experiences: men 'cumming' within minutes and the excuses they made when it happened; discussing the funniest places we had done it, favourite positions as well as giving and receiving when it comes to oral sex.

The typical stuff. At one point, we went around the table counting the amount of sexual partners we had all had in the past. Thinking back to it, I don't remember whose idea it was.

We went round one by one.

The first girl Alex, 19, said two and briefed us on who they were. It was your typical story of the guy who was her first and then an on and off ex. Followed by Alex was Mya who, also 19, had been with three guys. I remember her describing one of the guys as one that didn't count for various reasons. 'If it's just the tip, it doesn't count!' she said as we all died of laughter. Then there was me who had been sexually active with two guys.

I too shared the in's and the outs of my past, an ex and a rebound. Last up was Natalie, 18, who had slept with twenty guys. Now, even though this was four years ago, I still remember being overwhelmed with disbelief. She got a pen and paper out and then wrote their names down, whilst talking us through some.

I wanted Natalie to be lying. She couldn't possibly have been with TWENTY men... Been in contact with TWENTY penises.

I was judging her and I'm sure the other two girls at the table were too. I judged her hard. Though we had only known each other for such a short amount of time, I wanted her to un-fuck all those men right there and then.
